Ray Jason's 9th Anniversary Show

Once again, Fort Mason Center and the GGNRA are pleased and proud to announce the presentation of an event of extraordinary & joyous proportions:
RAY JASON'S 9TH ANNIVERSARY SHOW!!!

Each year since 1974 (with the exception of last year) Ray Jason, San Francisco's first street juggler, has produced a remarkable evening of entertainment featuring the best of the city's indigenous performers.

Last year Ray fulfilled a dream of juggling around the world, performing on the streets of 30 cities including China, Russia, Japan, Thailand and New Zealand. He was gone for 254 days with just what he could carry on his back. Consequently, he was unable to celebrate his anniversary in the usual manner.

Nine years ago Ray began juggling on the streets of San Francisco, and inspite of the fact that he has occasionally been hassled by the local police, his love of the city and his gratitude for being allowed to continue to perform on the streets prompted him to conceive of a free show for the citizens of San Francisco. The response from his fellow performers has always been joyous and wonderful. Donating their time and energy, performers, technicians, graphic persons and other friends help to create a night of magic and a celebration of rare beauty.

This year on Saturday, July 12, with the inimitable Scott Beach as Master of Ceremonies, Ray gathers another amazing group of friends together. These include:

Duck's Breath Mystery Theatre
Carol Elliott
L.O. Sloan's Minstrels
Camden Richman & Trio
Professor Gizmo
Pickle Family Circus Jugglers & Clowns
Ray Jason

The show starts at 7 PM in Pier 2, Fort Mason. Bring a blanket, food, and what ever else you need to stay high. You are sure to have a wonderful time.

Women Engineers Train for First Phones

Western Public Radio, one of our oldest residents, will conduct the first radio engineering course for women in this country at Fort Mason during the summer.

WPR, a production and training center, designed the classes to train women in technical and engineering theory to help them gain the Federal Communication Commission's First Class License Examination, a requirement for top engineering positions in radio.

"Traditionally women have been underrepresented in the field of engineering, despite the enthusiasm of many women in public broadcasting to enter the field," says WPR Vice President Susan Horwitz.

WPR hopes this 12 week course, partially funded by the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, will help enhance the position of women in the public broadcasting industry.

"The response from women in public radio in the Bay Area was exciting. It is obvious that a class like this is long overdue," says WPR's Horwitz. Participants have been selected from several public radio stations in the Bay Area.

Also this summer, starting July 12, WPR is sponsoring a series of creative vocal workshops. The classes will cover a variety of approaches to copy and vocal techniques.

Participants wil learn vocal exercises, vowel spreads, rising and falling inflections, characterizations, dialects, and how to mark copy for narration.

Call 771-1160 for more information.

Bay Area Playwrights Form Production Group

Thirty-four Bay Area playwrights have organized the Playwrights' Center of SF to assist in the development, promotion and production of each other's plays. They intend to improve upon traditional methods of script development by offering a three-step development process for member's work. The Center will also act as clearinghouse for information on playwriting contests, new markets for scripts and industry news.

Now in its fifth month of operation, the Center uses a three-phase approach to script development that was pioneered by the 20-year old Chicago Playwrights' Center. In the initial phase, a script is group read and then critiqued by the membership. In the second phase, the script is rewritten and given a second reading by rehearsed actors. Again the membership critiques it.

After another rewrite, the membership or a committee made up of playwrights decides whether the script is eligible for full production.

Besides group feedback, the Center also offers the advantage to playwrights that scripts are judged solely on artistic merits—apart from commercial considerations. According to founder Bill Lees, a retired advertising man and a Chicago Center alumnus, the primary purpose of the new Playwrights' Center is to help produce artistically better scripts for stage, film & TV.

Membership in the organization is open to all stage, film, television and radio script writers—produced or not. Actors, directors and theater technicians, as well as the general public, are also invited to participate in the Center's weekly reading-critique sessions, which are held every Tuesday (7:30 pm) at Fort Mason. For more information call Bill Lees at 931-2392.
